

Answers

Below is the corrected paragraph. The correct answers are shown in red. There is a guide in blue to where you can find more information about the grammar points in this paragraph. All information can either be found in the 'How to Use Verb Tenses in Business' book or from lessons in the Fluency Space Academy.

The famous fast food chain Burger King is currently battling (See 'How to Use Verb Tenses in Business' Lesson 1) an intensive lawsuit in the USA. It has been accused (See 'How to Use Verb Tenses in Business' Lesson 3) of making its flagship product, the 'Whopper' burger, appear much bigger in photos than it is in reality.

In the food industry, (See 'a' and 'the' Lesson) it is almost impossible to make products look exactly as they do in pictures, so food companies are not expected make their final product appear exactly the same in an advertisement. However, if (See 'if or in case' Lesson) an advertisement is judged to be deliberately deceptive it then it can result in a serious legal dispute.

In the case of Burger King, the burgers allegedly look not only bigger, but also much meatier with thicker burgers, which could be deemed deceptive.

Many consumers said that they would not have spent money on (See 'Key Prepositions and Collocations in Business English' Lesson) the 'Whopper' burger if they had known (See 'How to Use Verb Tenses in Business' Lesson 15) how small the product would be.

Since the beginning of the lawsuit, other fast food chains such as McDonalds and KFC have also come (See 'How to Use Verb Tenses in Business' Lesson 4) under scrutiny. Consumer rights groups are considering launching (See 'Key Patterns to sound more Professional' Lesson) similar lawsuits against these companies.