24 Hours in a Tokyo Micro-Apartment

From the door, you can see the whole flat except the bed, which is locating directly above the kitchen area. On the right, there is a small shower next to a toilet. The area is so small that you could feasibly make dinner in the kitchen while to sit on the toilet.

I spent the night at a place called Shanti Casa, in Tokyo, a solution for young people who can't afford the city's high rent prices, which increase even higher due to the current inflation crisis in the country. The micro-apartment is just 9m<sup>2</sup> room with white walls and a large window.

I stayed in one of these flats since 24 hours. I spent the night alone. Due to the bed was above the kitchen area, I was afraid of falling from the bed onto the floor, but it didn't happen thankfully! I have to confess that I actually felt quite relaxing, but I think that I would soon become unhappy with the lack of space if I would have to live here long-term.
