Brazilian Heatwave

Brazil currently experiences a brutal heatwave, with temperatures hitting 43°C in Rio de Janeiro on Friday. The city of Rio de Janeiro is sometimes naming “Hell de Janeiro” by residents during the summer months, and this year it is certainly living up to its nickname.

During the frequent heatwaves in the city, many residents seek for help in the form of a cold shower or a swim in the sea. However, it is the poorer areas known as “favelas” what are often the worst affected by the situation, due to favelas are much more crowded, with a high density of buildings and poor construction conditions.

Brazil already had 6 heatwaves so far this year, and we are still over 1 month away from the start of the Brazilian summer. “In case temperatures get much hotter when summer will arrive, I am not sure how we will cope”, said Marileidi Francisco, a shopkeeper from Arará.
