Carrefour's Fight Against Price Increases

Carrefour, one of France's biggest supermarket chain, has announced that it will stop selling Pepsi products because they became too expensive. When the products will sell out on the shelves, they will not be replacing.

This is the latest move in Carrefour's fight against increasing prices for many branded goods. Since September, the supermarket is placing signs next to products what have decreased in size but increased in price, a process known as "shrinkflation". According Carrefour's CEO, Alexandre Bompard, "Customers can really benefit of seeing exactly which products have increased in price. They are often extremely grateful to see these advices, as it is often difficult to notice that a product has decreased in size or weight."
