France and the iPhone

France has ordered Apple to stop to sell the iPhone 12 because it is allegedly emitting too much radiation.

On Tuesday, the French government has told the tech giant to fix existing phones, and in case it cannot resolve the issue until the end of the month, ideally through a software update, it must recall every iPhone 12 ever sold in the country.

Apple contests this review, claiming that the iPhone 12 is compliant with all relevant regulations. Both Apple and the French government believe that they have right, and they want that the matter is resolved as soon as possible.

Apple is one of the leading global Smartphone manufacturers since the launch of the first iPhone in 2008. With such fierce competition in the smartphone industry, it would be a major blow to apple in France if they would have to recall all iPhone 12 models.

Despite of strong fears at the very beginning of the mobile phone era, The World Health Organization has always claimed that such low level electromagnetic fields emitted by phones are of no danger to humans.
